From the Executive Dean

It is now almost one year since I was offered the role of Dean and nearly six months since my family and I arrived in Brisbane. Although I can claim little of the credit, 2014 has been another outstanding year at UQ, and the Faculty’s achievements have been no exception.

Read more

President Obama inspires students with landmark speech

US President Barack Obama urged young Queenslanders to “keep raising their voices” in a landmark speech at The University of Queensland on Saturday, 15 November.

Read more

Celebrating our Women in Engineering

The importance of gender diversity within the engineering profession was the focus of a number of events held recently at UQ. These events highlighted the contributions which women make to the engineering profession, and the necessity for a more gender diverse workplace.

Read more

Breaking down the barriers

More alumni and organisations than ever before are partnering with Engineering, Architecture and IT to offer scholarships that support and inspire talented and under-represented students to reach their potential at UQ.

Read more
Alumni making an impact globally

With alumni spread across more than 142 countries, UQ continues to make an important global impact. We salute engineering alumni who are using their engineering knowledge, expertise and passion to lead change across India, Cambodia and East Africa in a way that improves the lives of those living in developing communities.
Read more

“Houston, we have an exceptional achievement!”

A University of Queensland graduate has been recognised for his contributions towards NASA's space exploration goals.
Read more

Accolades at Courting the Greats

Two UQ Engineering alumni received accolades for their leadership and career success at this year's celebration held in UQ's Advanced Engineering Building… with not a spare seat in the house!
Read more

Tech entrepreneur starts up early success

Combining games technology with a breathing exercise for kids suffering from cystic fibrosis (CF), has seen UQ PhD student Elliott Smith (BE 2012) named as the 2014 Hills Young Innovator of the Year and heading to the Silicon Valley.
Read more

Engineering a healthier society

At our inaugural EAIT Leaders of Influence Lunch Series event an expert panel showcased how UQ biomedical engineering is improving the health of our society. Highlights included current research in how MRI technology can be used to better treat cancer, innovation in improved cardiac technology, needle free vaccine delivery and gaming technology for helping kids manage cystic fibrosis.
Read more and watch the speeches online
Engage with the next generation of engineers

Do you remember the search for work experience when you were an undergraduate student? Supporting the next generation of UQ engineers through providing work experience opportunities is an outstanding opportunity for you to engage with our best and brightest students on real and immediate challenges facing your company.

[Read more]

Reconnect with your classmates

Do you want to reconnect with your friends from your graduating class? Did you know that the UQ Alumni team can help you get in touch and assist with planning class reunions both large and small? If you are interested in organising a reunion for your graduating class, we can help you get started.

[Read more]

^merge is coming - 03 December

The School of Architecture at UQ presents ^merge: the annual exhibition of graduate and undergraduate work to be held at The Edge, (State Library of Queensland) from December 03 - 07, 2014.

[Read more]